

The six-month workers' comp 'rate holiday' is ending.

For the last six months of 2007, L&I used higher-than-expected investment earnings to pay both the employer's and worker's share of the premium that pays health-care benefits for injured workers. This partial rate holiday saved employers and workers about $315 million in premiums.

The rate holiday is now ending, and your employer should resume deducting premiums for the Medical Aid Fund from your first paycheck for work performed in 2008. This deduction has been adjusted to reflect increases in health care costs.

More information about the rate holiday is at www.RateHoliday.Lni.wa.gov

December 2007

Washington State Department of
Labor & Industries

The six-month workers' comp 'rate holiday' is ending.

For the last six months of 2007, L&I used higher-than-expected investment earnings to pay both the employer's and worker's share of the premium that pays health-care benefits for injured workers. This partial rate holiday saved employers and workers about $315 million in premiums.

The rate holiday is now ending, and your employer should resume deducting premiums for the Medical Aid Fund from your first paycheck for work performed in 2008. This deduction has been adjusted to reflect increases in health care costs.

More information about the rate holiday is at www.RateHoliday.Lni.wa.gov

December 2007

Washington State Department of
Labor & Industries

The six-month workers' comp 'rate holiday' is ending.

For the last six months of 2007, L&I used higher-than-expected investment earnings to pay both the employer's and worker's share of the premium that pays health-care benefits for injured workers. This partial rate holiday saved employers and workers about $315 million in premiums.

The rate holiday is now ending, and your employer should resume deducting premiums for the Medical Aid Fund from your first paycheck for work performed in 2008. This deduction has been adjusted to reflect increases in health care costs.

More information about the rate holiday is at www.RateHoliday.Lni.wa.gov

December 2007

Washington State Department of Labor & Industries